Easy Conundrums

The Body in Mulmur: The tape was already rewound and ready to play. On the Credit Valley Line: It was daylight. In a Field Near Creemore: None; the hoofprints are covered by the turned earth. The Lockton Conundrum: Four errors – three spelling errors plus the claim there are only two. Here in the Hills: The letter 'u'.

More from the Walls of S.S. #15

dwarf dwindle dwell. (In the early days of S.S. #15 a fourth "dw" word was still being used: the abbreviation "dwt.," for deadweight tonnage).

Crossing the Humber

Two prisoner brothers paddle to the west side; one gets out and the other goes back, picks up the third, takes him over to the west side and then returns to the east and gets out.

Two officers now cross to the west side. One gets out and is replaced by a prisoner.

The officer and prisoner go back to the east side. Here, the officer stays in the canoe; the prisoner gets out and the third officer gets in.

The two officers then paddle over to the west side and get out. The one prisoner on this side gets in, crosses to the east, picks up one of his brothers and returns to the west.

Both get out; one officer gets in, crosses over to the east and brings back the remaining prisoner.

All six are now on the west side and the officers were never outnumbered at any time.
