

ERIN'S WOOLLEN MILL TRAIL

The Village of Erin has a rich industrial past, and the interpretive signage that lines this pretty trail both celebrates Erin's natural heritage and brings its settlement history to life. Originally called Macmillan's Mills, after settler Daniel McMillan who built the first house and several mills on the West Credit River, the name was changed first to Erinsville then shortened to Erin by 1880. Follow up your historic walk with a pleasant stroll along Main Street where you'll find shops, a tea room, bakeries and more.

Former woollen mill and flume c.1840.

VILLAGE OF ERIN

EASTERN WHITE CEDAR
Historically, Vitamin C-rich Thuja occidentalis was used to wash wounds and treat fungal skin irritations.

DANIEL MCMILLAN'S GRIST MILL
First built in 1849, the mill was rebuilt twice after fires, and is now being converted into a library.

McMillan's Mill and flume.

Look for this charming trailside birdhouse.

Look through the trees and across the river beyond this bench for a view of McMillan Mill.

Many of the shops on Erin's charming Main Street occupy the original Victorian-era buildings.

HIKING ETIQUETTE
Hike only on marked trails. Obey all signs. Carry out all litter, including dog poo. Keep dogs leashed. Don't disturb people, animals, plants or trees. Have fun!

An easy 30-minute, 1km interpretive hike.

- Woollen Mill Trail
- Historic watercourse

NICOLA ROSS IS THE AUTHOR OF THE BESTSELLING LOOPS & LATTES HIKING GUIDE SERIES